The ergogenic potential of r-HuEPO, demonstrated through improved aerobic capacity and performance has reported r-HuEPO to be the most widely abused erythropoietic stimulant till date. This study was aimed at determining the effects of r-HuEPO on the human metabolome by analyzing metabolites from blood plasma and urine. Analysis of these metabolites was then used to determine how such metabolic interactions affected physiological status and exercise performance. Three well trained individuals participated in the study. Blood and urine were collected from the subjects. Plasma and urine samples were analyzed for metabolites by LC-MS Orbitrap and data was analyzed in the form of heatmaps and PCA plots. Further data interpretations for metabolites of interest were performed by a software, mzMatch/PeakML. Analysis of the human metabolome revealed 1000 metabolites which...
