Not illustrated. 1903 Excerpt: .Ratio of Beat-interval Value in Seconds of Average Interval. to Group-interval. A A A 1.000: 1.400 3.5 5.3 9.0 (LOCX): 1.000 4.0 5.4. 9.6 1.000: 0.714 5.2 8.4 10.8 The quantitative relations presented by these figures are consistent throughout. For every rate of speed the average rhythmic group is smallest when the interval separating the successive groups is at its maximum; it is largest when this interval is at its minimum; while in each case a median value is presented by the relation of uniformity among the intervals. In the second as well as the first of the ratios included in the foregoing table the interval which separates adjacent groups is felt to be distinctly longer than that internal to the group; in the third the relative durations of the two intervals are those which support psychological uniformity. In the latter case, in consequence of the freer passage from group to group, the continuity of the rhythmical series is more perfectly preserved than in the former, and the integration of its elements into higher syntheses more extended. The extension of the numerical limits of the rhythm group in subjective rhythm which appear in consequence of progressive acceleration in the rate of succession is given for a series of six different values of the separating intervals in the following table, the figures of which represent the average for six observers: Table V. Highest Units Which Appear. Value of interval in secs.: -/j-fj-fj-fa No. of el s in...
