Createspace, United States, 2013. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 226 x 150 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .This book is great story telling by Major Ralph Stoney Bates Sr., USMC (Ret), an accomplished and respected Marine, instructor on military and naval subjects at Furman University's Life-Long Learning Program (OLLI), and a previously published contributing author and editor of Short Rations For Marines. It is, in a word-lively! It is not at all boring or dull reading; rather it brings history alive. It immediately sparks your interest, and paints a vivid word picture describing the Marine Corps in a manner that most people have never been so accustomed. The reader will simply want more, and will get it. It tells the story of who the Marines are and how they became what they are today. It explains in unique and simple detail why and how John Archer Lejeune (pronounced luh jern), became A Marine Called Gabe, charted the course for the Marine Corps to follow into the future, and once that course was set, literally fashioned the Marine Corps that fought across the vast Pacific in World War II, and in every following war and skirmish-right up to today. This is the Marine Corps that often deploys on massive humanitarian and rescue missions on a world-wide scale. This is the Marine Corps that possess the will, character, and capability to project military and naval power anywhere, at any time, and always accomplishes its mission. This is a Marine Corps envisioned by its architect John Archer Lejeune. At the conclusion of the book, A Marine Called Gabe, there will be no doubt that John Archer Lejeune is the greatest leatherneck of them all. During his life, especially his developing life leading toward the Naval Academy and...
