Excerpt: . architecture that prevailed about Elizabeth s reign. It was originally designed only as a hunting-box for occasional residence, nor has it experienced much external alteration. It is built in the form of a Roman E, and is nearly surrounded with walls, as was generally the case with the family mansions of that period, which were connected with a town or village. It being seldom visited as a show-house, I do not conceive that a long description will be necessary. In the deer park, which faces the front of the house, is a high round hill, called Bradley Little Knoll, which is decorated with a hanging wood. The road which passes from Frome to Stourhead, c. divides this knoll from a high range of hills, called Bradley Long Knolls, and is the western termination of the Wiltshire Downs, which advance majestically to the extremity of the county, and constitute a very conspicuous land-mark, overlooking most part of Somersetshire. sect. xv. Longleat, Is the seat of the Marquis of Bath. Mr. Thomas Davis, who is steward to this nobleman, has favoured me with a particular, and I believe correct, description of it; some part of which has been before published. When we find genius and talents, actively exerted for the public good, we feel it a duty to applaud the individual. Mr. Davis has meritoriously employed his time in acquiring a knowledge of the ancient history of Longleat; and having been for forty years past engaged...
