She turned her handkerchief down from her neck, which, with the glow that the work had brought into her cheeks, formed an object which I do not say would have made me actually stammer, had it not been for the occupation in which she was engaged; but, all taken together, the temptation was too strong to be resisted. But, there is the Sunday, and I know of no law human or divine, that forbids a labouring man to dig or plant his garden on Sunday, if the good of his family demand it; and if he cannot, without injury, to that family, find other time to do it in. Shepherds, carters, pigfeeders, drovers, coachmen, eons, printers, and numerous others, work on the Sundays. They are deemed by the law, works of necessity. Harvesting and haymaking are allowed to be carried on...
